The novel opens with the protagonist, a young woman named Sarah, receiving a letter from her estranged father. In the letter, her father reveals that he is dying and that he wants Sarah to come home to visit him. Sarah is hesitant at first, but she eventually agrees to go.

When Sarah arrives at her father's house, she is greeted with mixed emotions. She is happy to see him, but she is also angry and resentful. Her father has been absent from her life for many years, and she feels like he has abandoned her.

Over the course of the next few days, Sarah and her father begin to talk about their past. Sarah learns about her father's struggles and his regrets. She also learns about her own mother, who died when Sarah was very young.

As Sarah spends more time with her father, she begins to understand him better. She realizes that he is not the monster she thought he was. He is a flawed man, but he is also a loving father who wants the best for his daughter.
