Early History

Schwab was founded in 1971 by Charles Schwab. Schwab had previously worked at E.F. Hutton & Co., where he had been a successful stockbroker. However, Schwab was frustrated by the high commissions that E.F. Hutton charged its clients. He believed that there was a better way to provide financial services to investors.

Schwab founded his own company with the goal of providing low-cost brokerage services to individual investors. Schwab's early clients were primarily small investors who were looking for an affordable way to buy and sell stocks.

Growth and Expansion

Schwab's business grew rapidly in the 1970s and 1980s. The company benefited from the increasing popularity of individual investing. Schwab also expanded its product offerings to include a variety of financial products and services.

In 1983, Schwab became a publicly traded company. The company's stock has consistently performed well, and Schwab is now one of the most valuable financial services companies in the world.
